NIKKI MARCHAND

University of British Columbia Okanagan
Master of Arts, Indigenous Knowledges

“My life goal and passion for sharing my story and my tools forward, in hopes to bring healing to our people is a path that is bigger than just myself. I feel that the Creator gave me these gift and experiences to share and walk forward speaking my truth, knowing that my Ancestors are beside me. I have learned the most listening and watching our Leaders speak from their own experiences and how they found a way to follow a good path.”

KRISTEN PIKE

Master of Arts, Indigenous Knowledges

Reflecting on my journey, I realize my family prepared me to take risks outside my comfort zone. From there – people around me provided encouragement, leading to a career working on the priorities of First Nations communities. I have prioritized i? sqəlx<sup>w</sup>cawtət uł i? nqilx<sup>w</sup>cntət (our ways and our language) as how I show up for my relatives now. I look forward to applying my strengths to our syilx language and culture as the next stage of my career.

KARA ROSS

University of British Columbia Okanagan
Masters of Education

“Our teachings remind me that I am never alone; we are always in relationship with our ancestors, land, and people. Our stories, language, and ceremonies have carried us through generations of challenge, and they remind me that healing and knowledge go hand in hand. This grounding in Syilx values helps me stand strong in institutions that weren’t built for us. It reminds me to carry our teachings forward, not just for myself but for the generations yet to come.”
